Decorating Her House-The Fashionable Coat for a Man.

Five O'Clock Tea. Clatter of tongues and spoons; Gossip and spicy asperity. Atmosphere—good for swoons.

Move, if the swift dexterity Known to the clown be thine. That's what you see At a five o'clock tea Served in a social shrine. his is the game Society (Spelt with a big. big S) Plays to dispel satiety. Weariness disposses. Tannical insobriety Varies the dreary round, Therefore you roam To a crowded at home.

Carefully groomed or gowned. "Awfully glad to see you!" "Awfully good to come!" The rest, as the damsels tea you, Is lost in the 'wildering hum. Nobody comes to free you Of saucer and spoon and cup; So you stand and smile In a vacant style.

And long to be out and up.

The house party went to the entertainment together and several of the young men in- cinch club Friday. Mr. and Mrs. Baum- navy. their friends, so that her programme was full. Not only the young man who took her, but others had danced with her more and she had the best kind of a time with so much attention. Finally the hour began to be very late; many had left, and the visitor found herself sitting out a dance present. The occasion was the organization with a young man. She was talking with him, and suddenly changed her conversation to something like this: "It must be getting late, and we ought to be thinking of dilemma. I came here with a young man, but I never saw him until this evening when Jessica introduced me. I know I have danced with him, but I have not the faintest idea what he looks like."

The young man quietly asked her if she knew his name. She told him she did, and then repeated the name. She saw he looked at her in rather an odd way, and then he broke out into a laugh. She was talking to

A woman of this city has been refurnishing the downstairs part of her house and she desired to have each room in a different color. She chose her samples from a color card, so that she could select her carpets, paper and hanging to match. She visited the shops day after day and looked at carpets, papers and draperies until her eyes ached, and then she would go home only to visit Washington street the next day to go through the same experience. Finally, she had it all to please her. The margue-"just too sweet for anything," and the daffodils bloomed in the yellow room in a way that made one wish to pluck them from the walls. Chrysanthemums formed the decoration of another room, and the daintiest of pink white roses another. The carpets were made and brought home, and the housewife was disgusted to find that samples of color were no criterion, for the color of the flowers on the plain ground changed the tint of the color so that the plain paper and the plain hangings, in several of the rooms "swore at each other," and the weeks of worry and work and tire had not resulted in the symphony of color which she was so anxious to carry out.

A man who likes to dress well went to a tailor and had a new coat made. It fitted him like a glove, but the tailor was not satisfied with it and pulled it here and there and then the tailor delivered himself of this information in answer to the question:

"Then what's the matter with it?" "Why, principally just the points that I have enumerated. To put it more briefly "Why, principally just the points that I have enumerated. To put it more briefly and in a little plainer language I might say Bradway and Misses Alice Lockwood, Carthat, from the standpoint of the present fashions, the fault lies in the fact that it fits. What you need, if you are going into Hurlburt. Daisies and carnations were society, is a coat that has been fitted to an open umbrella and that won't touch you anywhere except on the shoulders. If it looks well on you, you may put it down at once as decidedly out of date."

Among the gatherings for the coming week will be the small company to-morrow evening to be given by Mrs. H. B. Holman for her daughters and their visitor, Miss Withers, of Philadelphia, and the banquet and ball of the Americus Club; Tuesday the luncheon by Mrs. W. R.
